

ABSTRACT

A method for controlling the operation of an article forming system by incorporating into the article forming system a monitoring system which reads an identifier disposed on or in a sheet of material. The identifier provides information regarding the sheet of material so as to indicate whether or not the sheet of material relates to a particular category. The operation of the article forming system can then be modified based on the sheet information encoded by the identifier which is read by the monitoring system.